

Choices at the end of life

Review of choice in end of life care consultation events

About the events

These events are being organised by the National Council for Palliative Care as part of the National Review of choice in end of life care. They are just one way that people can share their thoughts and experiences to inform the review. You can read more about the review by visiting www.ncpc.org.uk/choiceoffers or contacting us, using the details shown at the end of this form.

www.ncpc.org.uk/choiceoffers offers or contacting us, using the details shown at the end of this form.

The events offer a chance for people with a personal interest in, or personal experience of palliative and end of life care to hear more about the review, share their thoughts about the kinds of choices that are important in end of life care and consider what needs to be in place in order for them to be a reality.

We're holding two events, one in London and the other in Leeds.

Who can come?

These events are primarily aimed at people who have a personal experience of or personal interest in end of life care. We do appreciate that many people have personal and professional experience but the focus of this event is on personal experiences.

If you are a professional working for an organisation that provides or works to improve palliative and end of life care in any setting, you can find out how to contribute to the review, please visit www.ncpc.org.uk/choiceoffers or contact us using the details shown at the end of this form.

These events are being organised and facilitated by the National Council for Palliative Care (NCPC) as part of the National Review of choice in end of life care
